MORE TO BE PITIED THAN SCORNE.

SEP 23 1922

Viola Lorraine and Julian are happily married. Julian, a local stock leading man, is loved by Josephine Clifford, an actress, while Viola is sought by Vincent Grant. The latter, in order to win over the girl, tells her that her husband is about to divorce her and marry Josephine. Julian interrupts the conversation, Vincent jumping out of the window. The husband suspicious that his wife has a lover, leaves the house with his child. Later he repents and returns, only to find his wife gone. Meanwhile the wife is injured and taken to a hospital, where she loses her memory. Julian starts a search, but it is in vain and in time he marries Josephine. Several years pass and Viola's reason has been restored. She locates her child and kidnaps her, taking Ruth to her home, where she is followed by the villainous Vincent, who threatens to harm the girl unless she consents to marry him. Rather than marry him and have her child injured Viola returns the child to Julian, who is told by Ruth that she had been taken there by her mother. Julian rushes out, just in time to catch his wife as she is about to run away. The truth is then developed and in the course of the play, in which Julian, Vincent and Josephine are playing, the husband attacks Vincent, who fires a shot, which kills Josephine. A desperate fight ensues, Vincent being killed in a fall from the balcony to orchestra pit. All is again well and the family reunited.
